Gumbo Tales: Finding My Place at the New Orleans Table. Of all the places I visited on my road trip across the United States, it wasn't until New Orleans, Louisiana that I truly felt alone. The city is tragically beautiful and unique and without any real clue as to where I was or where I should be going, I was overwhelmed. Thankfully, as I was wandering through the French Quarter, I met Sara Roahen in the Librarie Book Shop.

Ultimately, her book Gumbo Tales is about her acculturation, and notably this topic is explored by discovering, investigating, and preparing New Orleans foods, sharing them with others, and trying to understand their context in the city. Although her style is a breezy journalistic one with an edge of bemusement, she is a natural ethnographer with an intense curiosity and a penchant for wanting to explain and describe what she uncovered in her discoveries about food.
